What can fraternities and sororities do to end campus violence?

Campus violence can seem like an overwhelming problem and leave campus leaders feeling powerless. Often people shake their heads and say there's nothing we could have done to prevent tragedies like dating violence, rape, assault or even murder...but is that true?

Personal safety and self-defense expert, Erin Weed, believes the strong numbers and influence of Greeks on campus could save lives. In 2001, Erin's sorority sister was murdered at Eastern Illinois University, and the Greek community banded together to support one another. It made her wonder...what if we joined together in a PROACTIVE way, to prevent violence before it ever happened in the first place?

This program educates Greek students about campus crime and what they can do to keep themselves and the people they care about safe. Topics discussed include: how to trust intuition, ways to intervene as a bystander, activism ideas for creating a safe campus, the dangerous relationship between violence and alcohol, practical tips for avoiding all sorts of violence by living as a "bad victim" and finally, how to fight back if necessary. That's the fun part! The entire crowd stands up and learns simple and effective self-defense techniques that anyone can use, regardless of gender or size.

Fraternity men and sorority women can lead the charge in cultivating safe campuses for all students...and we will show you how. Get ready to laugh, learn and inspire change on your campus!

Erin's presentation was very moving and inspired the room to want to do more with their lives. She showed us how to learn to stand up for ourselves and fight back while being beautiful women. Her enthusiasm and honor had the audience on the edge of their chairs joining in her energy.
